Option to write your submission Or any comments : Believe there should be storage batteries placed on the Eyre Peninsula, Not just one big one at Jamestown. There should be multiple all over the state so as to help circumstances like what happened last year. The risk of one big battery is that MOTHER NATURE will give the state another storm like last year and take down infrastructure the same as last year.

Also I believe that multiple solar units similar to what is being placed around the Riverland could be funded by the local communities and also help to circumnavigate local black outs as well. The returns from payments from these solar units if funded by a community would financially benefit these communities as well
